Prosecutor Shepard's Opening Address a Forcible Statement.

He is Entirely Satisfied with the Men in the Jury Box.

The real business of trying John Y. McKane on the indictment charging him with unlawfully aiding, abetting and procuring the election inspectors of the First District of Gravesend to conceal the registration lists from public inspection during the last election, was begun in earnest this morning before Court of Oyer and Terminer.

That the Sheepshead Bay Sunday Superintendent appreciated the ravity of the situation was shown in the painful solemnity of his demeanor as he took his place beside his counsel and faced, for the first time, the jury which is to try him on these charges. first day of the proceedings that convicrisonment as the maximum penalty which the law could impose, and Mr. McKane could not regard this possibili-no delay in the proceedings, and for this reason Justice Bartlett has decided to reason Justice Bartlett has decided to begin the daily sessions at 9 o'clock, and at that hour he was on the bench this morning ready to go on. The courtroom even at that hour was well nilled, but the crowd was not as large as on the preceding days. The empty chairs and standing room, however, were rapidly taken up as the morning advanged. All the counsel on both sides were present ready for the fray, the prosecution headed by Gen. Benjamin F. Tracy and Edward M. Shepard, and the defense by ex-Judge Troy and George W. Roderick.

The jury, which is under the charge of two court officers, appointed by Justice Bartlett, had occupied rooms at the Hotel St. George during the night, and were taken over to the Court-House at 8.30 A. M. The jurors took their seats in the box as soon as the magistrate arrived. Here is the full list:

There was considerable talk before court opened about the rumor that Dennis Reardon, the eighth juror, might be unseated on account of his acquaintance with Patrick Ross, the grand-stand converted on account of his preliminary examinarion, but the prosecution accepted him, despite his admission that he lived in the same house with Ross. Lawyer Shepard said, however, that there had been no suspicion whatever of Mr. Reardon's eligibility, and remarked that it would be a good thing if every mar is the believed Mr. Reardon to be.

Lawyer Backus, of the defense, declared that there was no ground for suspicion against any one of the men in the jury-box. They had been selected only after the most careful and searching investigation, he said, and the prosecution knew all that could be known about every talesman who was called. It was $10 when the preliminaries had been disposed of and Justice Bartlett told the counsel to proceed with the case. Mr. Shepard at once began his opening address to the jury.

He opened by cailing the attention of the jurors to their grave responsibility in this case, in which the community was so deeply interested, and the necessity of withdrawing themselves completely from any preconceived opinion, reasonable or unreasonable, which they had formed upon the case. The issue was of the greatest importance, not only to the defendant, but to the public.

institutions, and 4t is time to call a hait."

The counsel then defined clearly what the charges against McKane were under the indictment. From Oct. 30 till the evening of Nov. 7. he said, it was charged that the registry lists had been inaccessible to the public, and that the election inspectors had refused to allow them to be seen, acting under the authority and command of John Y. McKane. The three elements in the proof that would be submitted to the jury, he said, would be submitted to the jury, he said, would be first, that the three election inspectors in the First District of Gravesend, Brownhill, Morris and Murphy, had actually refused to show the registry list during the period named; second, that this was done by the command of McKane, and third, that this was done by him with criminal intent.

In thus counselling and precuring a violation of the law stress would be haid on the fact that McKane was not an election officer. On the contrary, this fact made the offense still more outrageous, as it showed the enormous power which one man had gained in that community.

Mr. Shepard enumerated some of Mc-

Further outlie's the testimony to be presented for the prosecution. Mr. Shepard said that McKane's relations with the police force of Coney Island were of the utmost importance in connection with the registry frauds, and would be fully exposed. The names of Police Justices Newton. Sutherland and others would come up frequently, and likewise that of Capt. Hinman, showing how every means of authority was employed by McKane in procuring a violation of the law.

Shepard then went into the discusof the resistey lists themselves.

Mr. Shepard then went into the discussion of the registry lists themselves showing how those lists had been swelled through McKane' influence, and how he had controlled year after year nearly every vote of the town, and declared it to be the "worst of treason against the county in which we live."

After this the counsel took up the Election law section by section, and tailed that the prosecution proposed to show up every violation that had occurred at Gravesend during the last election. There was not merely a single violation in concealing the lists of registration, but other parts of the law had been disregarded as well, he claimed, by McKane and his followers.

He described how the town was divided into election districts, some of which contained a much larger number of veters, as appeared by the lists, than the law allows.

The peculiar arrangement of the poli-ing places in the Gravesend Town Hall was also described, and all the other irregularities sanctioned by McKane in order to enable him to fully control the vote of the town. vote of the town.

The provisions of the law, requiring the publicity of the registry lists were explained with great detail by Mr. Shepard. One copy was required to be publicly posted, and each of the inspectors was obliged to keep one at his house for the first day of registration for public inspection, during all reasonable hours.

Mr. Shepard had spoken for more than two hours, during which time every nook in the court-room was filled, and the words of the lawyer were listened to with eager interest as he recounted the various offenses of the Czar of Coney Island.

various offenses of the Czar of Coney Island.

McKane himself was one of the closest listeners. He was armed with a pencil and a pad of paper, and he spent a good deal of time in taking notes of Mr. Shepard's address to the jury, frequently squinting at the speaker over the tops of his gold-bowed eyeglasses, which perched upon the end of his stubby nose.

McKane seemed to be very busy writing all this time, and did not look up while Mr. Shepard was addressing his remarks to him personally.

There was another climax in Mr. Shepard's address to the jury when he described the assault upon Col. Bacon and his party, who went down to Gravesend on election morning armed with Justice Barnard's injunction.

He told the whole story, from Chief McKane's remark on that occasion that "Injunctions don't go here," to the declaration of Justice Newton, when the protesting prisoners were arraigned in Coming to the events of the last cambaigh, Mr. Shepard said that the Graves, and troubles grew out of the effort of the friends of William J. Gaynor to procure copies of the registration lists in the various voting districts of the Second Judicial Department, in order that they might send electioneering circulars to the voters, a perfectly legitimate and necessary mode of electioneering.

No difficulty was found in any district in the six or seven counties included in the district until Gravesend was reached. The obstruction met with there led to the astonishing discovery that out of a population of 8,400 Gravesend had 6,547 registered voters. This was so incredible that the original object in seeking to obtain the names on the list was overshadowed by this apparent evidence of frand.

Mr. Shepard then recounted the efforts
